The latest reports received at the state department at Washington on Saturday indicate that the insurgent Chilian war vessel, the Esmeralda, was still lying at Acapulco, and liable to remain in a state of "innocuous disuetude" for some time because of inability to procure coal. Her officers came ashore on Friday and attempted to bamboozle the American vice consul with a story that they had just received word that the Itata matter had been settled, coupled with a request that they be permitted to coal up from the Pacific mail steamship company's coal pile, that they might return to Chili at once. The consul did not bite, his only response being a caution to the guards at the coal yards. The Esmeralda may attempt to seize coal, in which event her position would be similar to that of the Itata. Matters are growing interesting in view of the situation.
